This legal helpline is a national service, and it is open to Ukrainians and their family members who require help with understanding the legal immigration routes for seeking safety in Scotland.

By calling 0800 995 6045, Ukrainians and their families will be able to ask for advice and information and speak with one of our qualified staff members, free of charge and with full confidentiality, so that they can advise on how to reach Scotland legally and safely.

We can also signpost to our partner organisations working to welcome Ukrainians in Scotland, for example, the Scottish Refugee Council.

If Ukrainians and their families are not able to call our helpline from outside the UK, or during those times, or if they require an interpreter, they can email us ukraine@justrightscotland.org.uk and we can arrange to call them back.

This vital, free and confidential service will provide high-quality initial legal assistance to address needs and protect fundamental rights as well as linking into other legal and support networks that have been established by our partners
